

METCHOSIN WINS

GRAND DUCHESS TO SEEK FORTUNE HERE

Grand Duchess Marie, above, a cousin of the late Czar of Russia, is going to help show American women the royal road to style. She's seeking a business career and soon will sail for the United States, where she says she wants to become a fashion adviser.

HEALS PILES

Quick Relief From Pain and Itching When You Use This New Ointment

It is nothing short of marvellous how quickly the itching stops, the pain eases and the swelling goes down, when you apply "Sootha-Salva" to inflamed or protruding Piles. This new ointment is the prescription of a famous physician and you can use it with every assurance that it will help you to quickly get rid of your piles. 50c at all druggists.

It costs you nothing if you do not benefit. After using two boxes of "Sootha-Salva," if you are not satisfied, just return the empty tin to Fruit-A-Lives Limited, Ottawa, Ont., and we will refund your money.

And Attracts Them
"It doesn't matter where old Rivette goes," declared the first speaker, "he's always surrounded by girls."
"Yes," agreed the other. "I can't understand the women nowadays. If Rivette were handsome it would only be natural, but a grey-haired old fellow like him—well, it beats me."
"There's one thing you seem to have forgotten," interrupted a third man, "and that's the fact that he's a steel magnate."

In 1844, it is related, such hallstones fell at Cete, France, that buildings were wrecked and vessels off shore sank.

Nan couldn't tell him—not to-night, when he was so tired and sad. While she was still struggling for words—any words rather than the truth, the necessity for answering was taken out of her hands. For the porch light of the little house across the street came on just at that moment, and out of the door stepped two figures—a man and a woman. Nan recognized the man instantly as Rufus Hubbard, a divorce lawyer. The woman, of course, was Iris Morgan. Beneath the unusually brilliant porch light her beauty, enhanced by a formal evening gown, was a breath-taking revelation.

Morgan stopped, stone still and stared. Nan felt his arm contract and harden until her own hand, tucked within it, was almost crushed by the pressure. He did not move or speak until Iris had called a gay good-night to her caller and vanished within the house. When Rufus Hubbard's jaunty stride had carried him to the sidewalk, the light flashed off. Then slowly, heavily, Morgan ascended the steps of his own house.

Iris's name was not mentioned between Nan and her husband that night, but it was a man with sick eyes and deep, new lines in his haggard face that the girl kissed her good-night just outside her own bedroom door.

The next morning Nan was not surprised to see Iris Morgan on her own porch, obviously awaiting her former husband's appearance. Brazenly, in defiance of neighbors who might witness the scene, Iris beckoned to Morgan, imperiously. He paused uncertainly on the step, his hand tightening convulsively upon Nan's shoulder. Then, as her eyes lifted to meet his, he encountered such a tragic, humble plea for guidance or permission, perhaps, that she nodded mutely.

She was about to turn back into the house, as Morgan started across the street, when the thought of the neighbors whom Iris seemed to consider stopped her. If any community gossip was watching from behind a curtain, let her also report that John Curtis Morgan's wife was being questioned to take place across the street. As she forced herself to look on, she was rewarded for the effort it cost her to stay by seeing Morgan firmly and definitely refuse his former wife's invitation to enter the house. Whatever was said between them—and the interview was brief, due obviously to Morgan's impatience to be gone—was said on the porch. Faintly across the street came the tremulous endearments of Iris's voice.

After a very few minutes the man turned his back upon that voice and his passionate pleas; turned toward the little figure waiting, erect and smiling.

"Good-bye again, Nan—and thank you," he said in a low voice. "I'll put this house on the market to-day, but there is no one to buy it until it is sold. We can be quite comfortable at a hotel for a few days, until we find a suitable house."

Relief so exquisite that it squeezed happy tears out of her eyes swept over Nan's heart. He had not failed her. God bless him! Now she must not fail him.

"What? Sell this place, when I've just had so much fun redecorating? Not if I have anything to say about it, John!" Her voice was gaily indignant, but her steady eyes said something very different: "We mustn't run, John. We can't win this fight by running away from it."

And it was what her eyes said that he answered. "Thank you, Nan." Then, not looking at her: "I have given my permission, Nan, for Curtis to visit his mother every afternoon. I—could not refuse. He is—all she has left."

"I have not kept him from her," Nan answered evenly.

"I know," he agreed quickly. "And—thank you again, Nan. . . Now I've got to make a dash for the courthouse. We're lunching together, aren't we? . . . Fine! Good-bye, dear, and—don't worry!"

During the week that followed Nan had many occasions to recall his futile advice. "Don't worry!" And every time she remembered, her lips twisted in that new, cynical, bitter smile that set so oddly upon their young softness.

CHAPTER XLV

Looking back upon that hideous week, Nan Morgan realized that it was the Blackbull case which made it possible for her to endure the miseries which Iris Morgan inflicted upon her. Hours spent in the office were not so bad, were even almost happy ones, for she was serving the man she loved as no one else could serve him.

There Iris was a rival ceased almost to exist for the man as well as for the second wife. From ten to five, whether Morgan was in the courtroom or at his desk, the junior and senior partner of the firm of Morgan and Morgan were united by bonds so strong that it seemed absurd that a red-haired, green-eyed woman who cared nothing for the career of the man she had been married to and deserted could dissolve them.

But the longest, most intensely exciting work day inevitably came to an end, and the two who had been one in work had to return to their home and become two tragically divided creatures.

Not that Morgan did not try. His efforts to play the role of devoted husband were even more painful to Nan than the spells of black depression to which he invariably succumbed before the terrible evening was over. The breakfast and dinner hours were the hardest of the day, for it was then that the alarming change in Curtis was most obvious. The child whom Nan in less than a year had transformed into a cheerful, sturdy little boy, reverted with the suddenness of black magic to the whining, obstreperous, sickly Curtis he had been under his mother's care.

Nan knew, and was fiercely wretched that she could not say so to the father, that Iris was deliberately using the child as one of her most powerful weapons in her fight against her successor. She knew, and did not see how Morgan could fail to see, that the child was acting under orders from the woman across the street when he petulantly refused to eat the wholesome vegetables set before him, when he said bitter, ugly, unchildish things to the girl who had been more than a mother to him; when he dragged in his real mother's name at least three times during every meal, when he asked precocious, searching questions as to why his own mother could not come home again to live and be with him nights, as well as afternoons.

"If you don't eat what Nan tells you to, and speak to her with courtesy, you will have to leave the table and go right to bed," was a remark which the harassed, tragic-eyed father was forced to make at least once during every dinner that was served in that miserable home.

"Won't eat spinach! Hate it! Won't drink milk, neither," Curtis would scream, his pale face going livid with rage. "Won't be nice to Nan! Hate her! She won't let my mother come home!"

And Nan, white-lipped, nauseated, would have to sit wordless before her own scarcely touched plate and witness the dreadful final: Curtis's banishment to his own room, howling, kicking.

"Perhaps, under the circumstances, a private school would be better," Morgan said somberly after his return to the table from one such scene.

"Does—his mother wish it?" Nan asked coldly.

Smart Doings of Animals

Bear Shows His Repentance for Mistakes

Jacob Glass, the German bear trainer, has a wrestling bear which seemed as intelligent at the sport as a human being. He knew all the wrestling terms, perfectly such as "half-nelson," "hammer-lock," "strangle-hold," etc.

Christian—that was the bear's name—obeyed all orders with good grace and would allow his food to be taken from him even while he was eating, but he would not submit to a whipping, although he would allow himself to be held down and choked as a punishment.

He then would be very penitent and would insist in climbing into his master's lap to show his regret.

HARRY LAUDER WILL FACE NBC "MIKE"

Sir Harry Lauder has finally signed a radio broadcasting contract. Announcing him by the National Broadcasting Company to-day states that the world's foremost Scotch comedian has consented to appear before a microphone in Winnipeg, on September 1.

His famous voice and hearty chuckle will be heard throughout the United States and Canada through a coast-to-coast network of thirty-six stations associated with the NBC and three stations in Canada during the "Enna Jettick Melodies" programme from 4 to 4.15 o'clock, Pacific standard time, that afternoon.

The famous comedian has appeared before a microphone in Europe but has never been heard throughout the North American continent. For his North American debut, Sir Harry has chosen three songs which have endeared him to hundreds of thousands who have attended his concerts. They are, "I Love a Lassie," "Wee Wee 'Mang the Heather" and "Roamin' in the Gloamin'." He is scheduled to close his part of the programme with his favorite hymn, as yet unannounced.

For years programme builders have dreamed of presenting Sir Harry but, until now, it has been only a dream.

It remained for the sponsors of "Enna Jettick Melodies" to induce the canny Scotchman to appear in their programme.

Youthful Painter Found It Hard to Study Art

"Why these are fine! You ought to study drawing, and you could do something with it." A friend who was visiting Edward Burne-Jones' father looked at some drawings on the table and nodded his head with great interest.

Edward was embarrassed. No one had ever paid much attention to his "scribbles," as the family good-naturedly called them. He didn't know why he drew. He only knew that he found it "fun" to carry about with him a pad of paper and pencil and jot down outlines of all sorts of objects that appealed to his fancy.

"Look at paintings in museums," advised the friend. "Try copying them. These drawings are worth something. You ought to keep at it."

The boy reddened with pleasure. Afterwards, in his little room, he thought it over. There were no pictures in his home that he liked. None of the houses of his friends had any copies of really great painting. No one thought much about art in that busy English town in those days.

"Museum," the visitor had said. There was a sort of museum owned by the city. Edward had never visited it, but the next afternoon he went there after school. He wandered around bewildered. There were a few stuffed birds, a stuffed animal or two, and some stone implements supposed to have belonged to cave men. But no paintings. Disappointed, he went home, wondering how he could study pictures when there were no pictures to be studied.

Edward Burne-Jones, born August 28, 1833, became a great painter, though he did not develop his full powers until rather late in life. (Copyright, 1929, by Republic Syn. Inc.)

BEDTIME STORY

Uncle Wiggly's Cup of Tea

Copyright, 1929, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

(By HOWARD R. GARIS)

Uncle Wiggly was hopping along through the woods one day when, all of a sudden, out from behind a bush jumped the Bob Cat.

"Oh, ho!" meowed the Bob Cat. "I am having good luck early to-day!" So he raced along after the rabbit gentleman, hoping to catch him. But Uncle Wiggly was feeling fine and dandy that morning, so he just tucked his legs under him and then he stretched them out and almost before he knew it, he was running twice as fast as he had ever run before.

"That Bob Cat isn't going to catch me!" said Mr. Longears. And the bad chap didn't. Uncle Wiggly was soon far ahead and safely away from the bad chap.

"Whew!" puffed the Bob Cat as he set down on a stone to rest. "I didn't know that Uncle Wiggly could hop so fast!"

So the rabbit gentleman went along a little farther and, all of a sudden, out from behind a bad book popped the Skilley Scallery Alligator with the double-jointed tail.

"Oh, ho!" bellowed the Gator. "I am having good luck early to-day!"

So he raced after the rabbit gentleman, hoping to catch him. But Uncle Wiggly was still feeling fine and dandy so he just tucked his legs under him and then he stretched them out and almost before he knew it, he was running three times as fast as he had ever run before.

"That Alligator isn't going to catch me!" panted the rabbit.

And the Alligator didn't, even with his double-jointed tail. Uncle Wiggly was soon far ahead and safely away from the bad chap, who sat down in a puddle of water to cool off. He puffed and blew and said: "My! Uncle Wiggly is some hopper!"

So the rabbit gentleman went along a little farther and, all of a sudden, out from behind a stump popped the Fuzzy Fox.

"Oh, ho!" barked the Fox. "I am having good luck early to-day!"

He raced along after the rabbit, hoping to catch him. But Uncle Wiggly was still feeling fine and dandy that morning, so he just tucked his legs beneath him and he stretched them out and, almost before he knew it, he was running four times as fast as he had ever run before in all his life.

"That Fox isn't going to catch me!" boasted Mr. Longears.

And the bad chap didn't. Uncle Wiggly was soon far ahead and safely away from Mr. Fox, who sat down under a waterfall to take a shower bath, saying, as he did so:

"Uncle Wiggly runs like the wind!"

By this time it was afternoon and Uncle Wiggly was feeling rather tired from having run safely away from three bad chaps. So, finding himself near the pen house of Mrs. Twisttail, the lady pig, Uncle Wiggly thought to himself:

"I'll just stop in here and rest."

"Oh, I am so glad to see you!" grunted the pig lady, whose husband had just gone to the six and seven-cent store to get some sour milk for dinner. "Come in and sit down. But why are you so out of breath?"

"I just had to run away from the Bob Cat, the Skilley Scallery Alligator and the Fox," explained the rabbit. "No wonder you are panting!"

To-morrow's Horoscope

THURSDAY, AUGUST 29, 1929

Good and evil planetary influences conflict to-day, according to astrologers. It is a time for routine work and ambitious plans.

Neptune is in an aspect read as most promising for those who have the courage to project great plans, whether they be in business or in public service.

Women are rather well directed to-day and should benefit if they are not aggressive, and they will be happiest in domestic activities while this rule of the stars continues.

This is read as a propitious day for signing contracts or for entering into business agreements of any sort.

The stars smile on advertising and publicity. Printer's ink will be more than ever in demand by men and women who have anything to offer the world, the stars predict.

There is an ill omen for lending money at this time, which may be most unfortunate for borrowers as well as lenders.

Good luck attends those who set sail from European ports for America to-day, it is foretold.

Entertaining that brings together small groups is subject to favorable conditions while this rule continues.

Small and intimate social gatherings are to supersede the large entertainments where wholesale hostilities are offered, astrologers foretell.

Warning is given by London astrologers that banks will be robbed according to novel methods and large losses sustained in the United States as well as Europe.

All the signs seem to indicate a continued war on society by lawless elements that will gain power until stopped by an international movement to eliminate crime.

Persons whose birthday it is have the luxury of a momentous year that brings many interesting experiences.

Children born on this day probably will be thoughtful and yet intensely independent. The subjects of this sign usually are ruled by logic instead of emotion.

John Locke, philosopher, was born on this date, 1632. Other distinguished men who have had it for a birthday include Oliver Wendell Holmes, American author, 1809; United States Senator Patrick Henry, 1773; David B. Hill, statesman, 1843.

grunted fat Mrs. Twisttail. "I'll make you a cup of tea. It will rest you."

"Oh, don't trouble!" begged the bunny.

"No trouble at all," said the lady pig. "Aunt Lettie, the goat, is here and she will like a cup of tea. I'll make you some, too."

So Uncle Wiggly sat and talked with Aunt Lettie while Mrs. Twisttail made the tea and brought it out on the porch. She said:

"Do you take sugar in your tea, Uncle Wiggly?"

"Why, yes, if you please, I do," he said.

Then Mrs. Twisttail wished she hadn't asked, for she forgot that she hadn't a grain of sugar in the pen. Her husband was going to bring some with the sour milk.

"Oh, whatever shall I do?" whispered Mrs. Twisttail to Aunt Lettie. "Uncle Wiggly wants sugar in his tea and I haven't a grain in the pen."

"Leave it to me," bleated the goat lady. "You keep on talking to him. I'll slip out the back door and pick some red clover blossoms. They have a sort of honey in them and he can squeeze clover sugar juice in his tea."

No sooner said than done. Aunt Lettie brought in some red clover tops, which, indeed, are very sweet. She gave them to the rabbit.

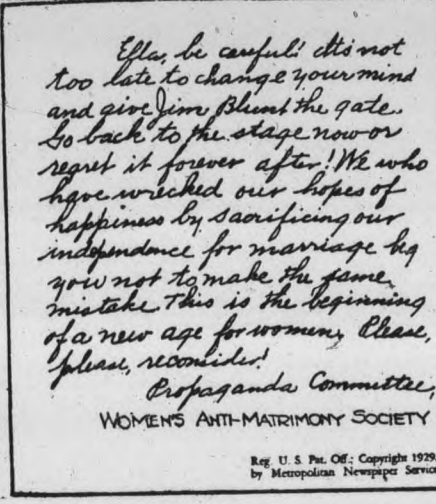

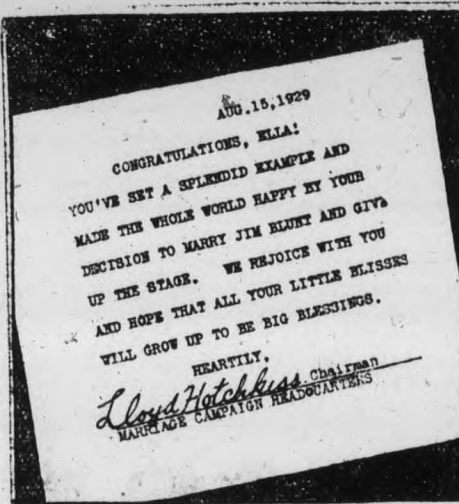

"Here is a new kind of sugar for your tea," she bleated.

"Oh, how clever and stylish!" said Mr. Longears. So he drank his tea with clover sugar to sweeten it and he felt very happy and told the goat and pig ladies all about running away from the bad chaps.

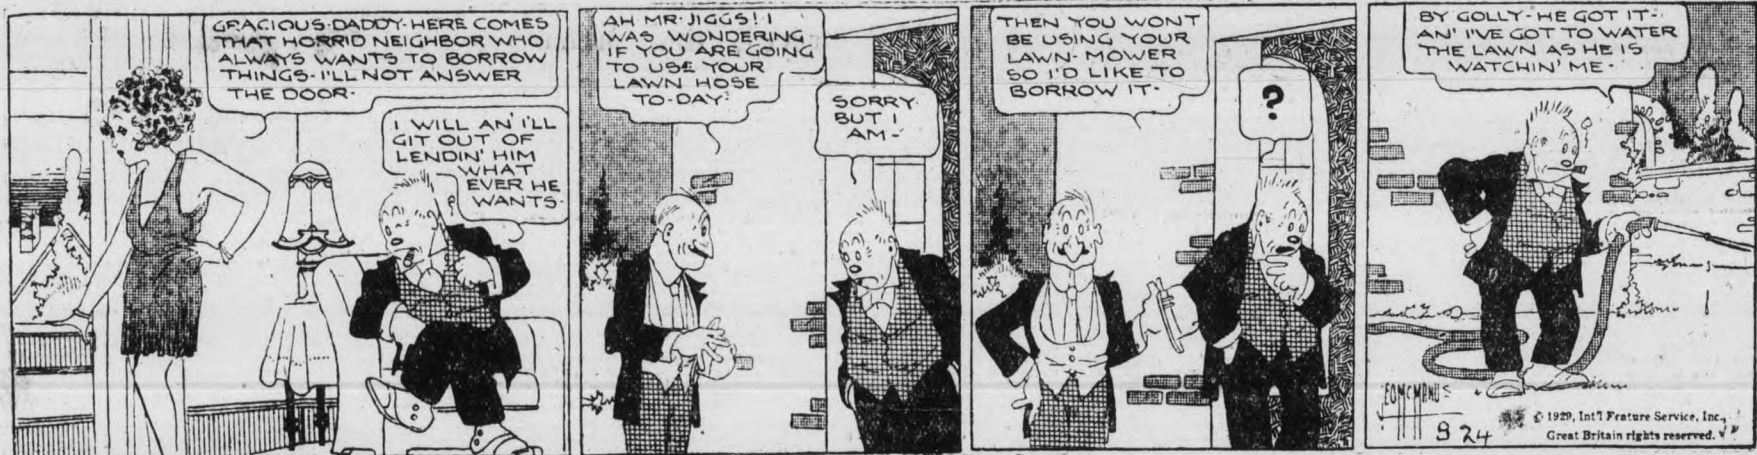

So it all happened for the best. And if the rubber ball will bounce three times and jump over the broom stick, I'll tell you next about Uncle Wiggly's stumble bug.

C.N. Vessel In Collision Off English Coast

London, Aug. 28.—The Canadian National Steamship Company's Canadian Mariner, bound from Montreal to London, collided with an unknown ship off Beachy Head, England, at 6 a.m. today in a dense fog. No injured were reported.

The Canadian Mariner was beached at Dover for repairs.

The coastguard service picked up the vessel's wireless distress signals and the Eastbourne lifeboat went to its aid. The lifeboat found the Canadian Mariner with a hole in No. 3 hold and taking water, but able to cope with the inflow by using all its pumps.

The lifeboat searched the spot for the unknown ship with which the Canadian vessel had collided, but could find no trace of it. It was believed it was undamaged and had continued its voyage immediately after the collision.

EMPRESS OF CANADA NOW BACK AT SEA

Speed Queen of Pacific Sailed From Southampton This Morning for Quebec

Completely overhauled and with new engines throbbing in her engine-room, the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Canada, speed queen of the Pacific Ocean, sailed from Southampton this morning for Montreal and Quebec, after being in drydock in Scotland for nearly a year.

The Canada will arrive in Quebec September 3 and three days later will sail again for Europe. On her return to Montreal she will sail for Victoria and Vancouver, arriving here October 14 by way of the Panama Canal. On October 17 she will take her first sailing to the Orient from this port.

It is expected that the new engines with which the Canada has been equipped will enable her to clip several hours off the present trans-Pacific voyage from Yokohama to Victoria, the holder of which is the Empress of Canada. The new engines are the same as will be installed in the liner Empress of Japan, now building in Scotland for the trans-Pacific run.

The passenger accommodation in the three classes aboard the Empress of Canada has also been extensively improved during her lay-over of nearly a year on the Clyde. Many of her state-rooms have been made larger and most of the public rooms redecorated.

ARREST MAN FOR OIL DISCHARGE

Seattle Port Warden Holds Assistant Engineer of President Grant on Charge

Seattle, Aug. 28.—The first arrest in the Seattle Harbor Department's campaign to protect Elliott Bay and the bathing beaches from pollution by fuel oil pumped into the harbor by ships was made at 10:30 a.m. yesterday, when S. M. Berry, first assistant engineer of the American Mail liner President Grant, was taken into custody aboard the vessel by Paul L. Sweeney, assistant port warden.

Berry was booked at police headquarters and released on his own recognizance at the request of Sweeney.

The penalty is a maximum fine of $100. Sweeney was accompanied to the liner by officials of the Washington State Fisheries Bureau. When they arrived at Smith Cove Pier 41 they found the President Grant pumping black heavy fuel oil into the bay from her ballast tanks. The chief engineer of the President Grant said the tanks contained both water and fuel oil, and he instructed Berry only to pump the water into the bay.

A close watch is to be kept by the Harbor Department to prevent ships from polluting the bay with fuel oil, and their arrests are expected to follow.
